SALVAGE Festival

COPY

SALVAGE Festival is a one day festival of site specific performance art taking place on Saturday the 21st of September (2019) at various sites along Folkestone's harbour coastline.

Invited artists will examine notions of reclamation, ecological sensitivity, damage control, value and care - within our current socio-political frame of late capitalism and environmental collapse.

With contemporary performance art as its lens, Salvage Festival will explore what can, should and must be saved, what will end in wreckage & how such processes will disproportionately affect minoritarian people and communities.

Co-funded by Diverse Actions; a Live Art UK initiative which champions culturally diverse (Black & Minority Ethnic) ambition, excellence and talent in Live Art - [ps] has commissioned 3 new works from UK based BME artists Kajoli Ilojak, Sikarnt Skoolisariyaporn & Vivian Chinasa Ezugha

Artists have not been given a materials budget and instead have been asked to deeply engage with the site responsive, reclamation & ecologically sensitive conditions of the festival's invitation.

"Black and Third World people are expected to educate white people as to our humanity. Women are expected to educate men. Lesbians and gay men are expected to educate the heterosexual world. The oppressors maintain their position and evade their responsibility for their own actions. There is a constant drain of energy which might be better used in redefining ourselves and devising realistic scenarios for altering the present and constructing the future."
